MAI'S HUSBAND (PAT MOLLOY), PADDY CONS DANCE HALL –

Mai speaks about being home from England on holidays and attending a carnival in Cusack Park with her best friend and her husband Paddy Hogan.

Mai speaks of a man standing in front of her as they walked around the carnival. Her friends introduced Mai to the man and left them to speak. Pat was stationed in Ballygreen at the time.

Mai speaks of Paddy Cons dance hall – her sister Rita was a great dancer. Mai brought the kids down every summer and on Sunday night her mother used to babysit so she could attend dances in Paddy Cons with her sister Rita and Rita's husband. Mai speaks of the crowds which used to attend the dance hall.

Pat asked Mai for her hand in marriage a week after meeting. Mai had already promised the nuns that she would return to Cardiff to work in a nursing home, so she told Pat that she would think about it. Mai returned six months later in January and married Pat in March.

Pat was not a dancer and didn't really enjoy the pictures so the couple used to visit friends a lot during their courtship.

Mai and Pat had a very small family wedding in the National Hotel in Limerick and went to Cork on honeymoon.

MOVING TO DUBLIN –

Mai and Pat had three children in Ennis before moving to Dublin. Their first home in Dublin was sharing a bungalow with Peg Barrett on Station Road. Peg's brother (Frank Barrett) was the commander in chief of the IRA in Clare at the time.

Later Mai and her family moved to Mill Street for a short time before renting a house in Lifford on the south side of Dublin.

Pat had moved to Dublin two years before the rest of their family as it was so difficult to get a house at the time. Mai used to come and visit regularly until they got their first house.

Mai always took the children home to Clare for the summer holidays every year as soon as school ended.
